

7 Unexpected Reasons You'll Be Glad You Got Travel Insurance

Congratulations on taking the first step toward discovering more about travel insurance. While it may not have previously been a top priority for you, there are many reasons why it should be. Planning a trip requires a hefty emotional and financial investment, and the best way to protect that investment is by capitalizing on insured travel coverage that takes effect when things don't go as planned. Read on to explore seven travel nightmares you can avoid by investing in travel insurance.

1. You Need to Cancel the Entire Trip

There are many unforeseen circumstances that can require you to cancel your trip altogether. Travel insurance can reimburse most non-refundable and prepaid travel expenses in the event that you need to cancel your trip before your departure. These reasons for cancellation often include scenarios like illness, injury, death, and weather.

2. Your Trip is Interrupted / You Require an Early Return

While you may depart for your travels on a good note, it's possible that a situation could arise during your trip that would require you to return home early. From becoming sick while traveling to hearing forecasts of impending bad weather to issues requiring your attention at home, unavoidable incidents like these can put a damper on your vacation. When you purchase travel insurance, you can be reimbursed for unused land or water package payments and for additional transportation needed to return home or rejoin the trip at a later date.

3. You Missed Your Connection

If you missed your flight, cruise, or tour departure due to reasons covered by the insurance plan, you can be reimbursed up to $1,500. This reimbursement can cover the additional transportation fees and accommodations costs that you may incur due to your missed connection.

4. You Incur Medical Expenses While Traveling

Though it's the last thing anyone wants to think about when preparing for a trip, it's important to acknowledge the possibility you could become sick or experience an injury while away from home. In the event you require medical attention during your travels, insurance can cover related medical expenses, including medication fees and even emergency dental work. Who wants to deal with a debilitating toothache while visiting an amazing destination? Prepare for the unexpected with a small investment in travel insurance.

5. You Require Medical Evacuation

Building upon the previous scenario, travel insurance also covers instances where you may need to be evacuated to another area or even brought back home due to an unforeseen medical issue or injury. Whether you require transport to the nearest adequate medical facility or returned to your personal physician's care, you'll be preemptively covered when you invest in travel insurance.

6. Your Travel is Delayed

Travel delays can occur for a wide variety of reasons including flight postponements, lost travel documents/passport, airline strikes, and severe weather. Your travel insurance investment protects your travel plans should any of these situations arise. If you face a delay of more than 12 hours, you'll be reimbursed for certain additional expenses.

7. Your Destination Experiences Inclement Weather

In the event that your destination is impacted or forecast to incur extreme weather, travel insurance has you covered. It may not be feasible to travel to certain areas after they've been hit by a hurricane, snowstorm, or other natural disasters, so your best bet may be to accept reimbursement for any pre-paid expenses and postpone your trip until a later date.

Make sure you're protected in case the unexpected occurs during your trip. By investing in travel insurance, not only will your financial contribution be protected, but you'll also achieve better peace of mind before, during, and upon returning from your travels. Life is unpredictable—it helps to have a plan in place to keep you safe.

If you'd like to learn more about adding travel insurance to your next vacation package, schedule a consultation today. Let's start planning an unforgettable getaway!